The International & Multicultural Education Department in the School of Education at the University of San Francisco is seeking an adjunct instructor to teach the following course IME 625/725: Contemporary International Issues. This program includes an MA-Human Rights Education and an Ed.D. concentration in Human Rights Education. We encourage outstanding and qualified candidates to apply as soon as possible. Below are course descriptions.

Mission Statement:

International & Multicultural Education (IME) Department: Since its inception in 1975, IME has been committed to understanding inequalities based on race, class, gender, and nationality as a way of promoting educational scholarship and research based on principles of equity and social justice. IME provides students with focused studies on formal and informal education within social, cultural, and linguistic contexts in both the United States and abroad. The IME Department has always been innovative in its curriculum and scholarship by promoting critical pedagogy and participatory action research.

Full Job Description:

This position involves teaching the following class, as well as holding office hours for meeting with students as needed about their course assignments.

Course Descriptions:

Contemporary International Issues:

This interdisciplinary course focuses on the social, political, economic and cultural aspects of current world events to help students situate themselves within global trends and histories. Course includes critical pedagogical methods to help students develop ideas on how to promote international awareness in their own classrooms.

Qualifications:

Must have a post graduate degree in the required field of teaching.

Full-Time/Part-Time:

Part time

Pay Rate:
