policies, practices, and intervention strategies that may serve as catalysts for change. In addition, we are particularly interested in researchers who investigate the role of higher education in social and economic mobility, specifically exploring its intersection with race/ethnicity, nation of origin, social class, gender expression, and related factors.

Responsibilities include:

- Conduct exemplary research, commensurate with Research 1 tenure track faculty appointments, leading to the development of innovative ideas and publications in prominent scholarly outlets
- Pursue extramural funding for research initiatives
- Teach two courses per semester at the graduate level
- Advise and mentor graduate students, including chairing and serving on doctoral dissertation committees
- Support efforts to recruit Ed.M. and Ph.D. students
- Fulfill service responsibilities related to program, departmental, and university affiliations

Appointments are for a ten-month academic year beginning in the Fall of 2025.

For full consideration, applicants should submit materials by September 21st, 2024. This position will remain open until filled.
