historically underserved school settings. Research interests should align with a commitment to providing access to high-quality literacy instruction and experiences from asset-based perspectives. Specifically, we welcome applicants with diverse methodological expertise including but not limited to quantitative and/or mixed methods research as well as applications from candidates who conduct qualitative research on literacy interventions in school-based settings. Qualified candidates should have a research agenda addressing current topics in the field of literacy education such as response to intervention, high-dosage tutoring, generative AI, or other areas.

Responsibilities include:

- Maintaining an active and productive research agenda commensurate with Research 1 tenure track faculty appointments
- Seeking external grant funding
- Teaching two courses per semester in graduate literacy programs
- Teaching and Advising Ed.M. and Ph.D. Students
- Serving the institution and the field of literacy education

Appointments are for a ten-month academic year beginning in the Fall of 2025.

For full consideration, please submit your materials by October 1, 2024. The position will remain open until filled.
